AROUND THE WORLD IN eight weeks, pampered pooches all. Disembarking in Cape Town from an over-the-top cruise on the Regent Seven Seas Voyager, we eclipsed all of our new cruise buddies and fellow travelers who are not used to being eclipsed. ENTREE was met immediately upon arrival by the Twelve Apostles Hotel and Spa's, Johan du Toit, Concierge Team Leader who was wearing tails and, along with our driver, a red carnation in his lapel. Ten suitcases later (we have good excuses for them, nah, maybe not strong excuses) we waved goodbye to our new best friends who were by now all watching and waving as we drove off. Not a one of their drivers had arrived. Most passengers had booked the hotels you would expect—lots of stars, well known, name-droppy. They weren't met, we were. The Twelve Apostles Hotel and Spa, a member of The Leading Small Hotels of the World, not only met but exceeded our every need and there were quite a few. We had luggage to be weighed and shipped and computer needs to be met. We wanted to make the most of our four days in Cape Town. Johan and his concierge staff gave us suggestions and we giddily accepted. We were not surprised when everything was organized perfectly. We flew from our hotel in their helicopter to Cape

PAY CLOSE ATTENTION. WE ARE GOING TO LET YOU IN ON ONE OF THE best-kept secrets in fine travel. Does the name “Gasparilla Inn & Club” sound familiar? Probably it doesn’t and that’s no accident, because for decades, The Inn’s owners have rather liked it that way. The Inn sits on Gasparilla Island, no surprise, which is on Florida’s Gulf Coast just North of Ft. Myers. Early last century, after the rail line was closed, Gasparilla Island became a very quiet, very elite winter colony; sort of Palm Beach without the facelifts or even Northeast Harbor with warm, sunny winters. Recently, there has been a small building outbreak but since no structure can be taller than the tallest palm tree, the air of rarified exclusivity remains. For many years, guests at The Inn tended to be friends of the owners or relatives of the island’s homeowners. The Inn does no marketing or advertising. In the past, the only publicity it received came when a society couple was married there, resulting in a discreet mention of the location in the New York Times. Recently, The Inn has been in the news due to the Bush family who like to check in for a week from Christmas until New Years. Jeb and “W” play golf on the Pete Dye-designed golf course or go out for some serious tarpon fishing. Dinner is with Mom and Dad in The Inn’s dining room where they are respectfully left alone. The golf course is open to guests and there are no tee times. Just show up and start playing. The very small village is only two blocks away and it’s cute but after dinner all just shuts down so it’s either backgammon, bridge or early to bed. Gasparilla Island may have been named after the Spanish Pirate Jose Gaspar and, as with most pirate myths, there could be buried treasure somewhere about. It’s an unverified legend but it does give the Island a bit of panache. The Gasparilla Inn is not the place if you want dress informally and use cell phones in the dining room, or watch TV during meals, or permit your children to run wild. This is your kind of place if you prefer quiet conversation, a wonderful spa, excellent staff, and fellow guests who are respectful of your space. Gentlemen are expected to wear jackets (ties are optional) and children should be well-mannered enough to eat by themselves without behaving badly. In the main dining room, Master Chef Peter Timmins offers a traditional heritage fine dining experience each evening. Prior to joining the Gasparilla Inn, Chef Timmins was the Executive Chef at the Greenbrier Resort in West Virginia. There are several other venues for dining. The Pink Elephant for steaks and seafood, BZ’s for cocktails and The Beach Club

where we spent a lot of time. The bartender at the beach club has her own version of a Planter's Punch that should not be missed. Accommodations consist of 62 rooms in The Inn and 18 guest cottages which we highly recommend. Rates start at $245 Fall/Spring Seasons and $375 during social Season. The Inn will be closing this season, June 27 (after which they do a total overhaul) and opening for their 97th season, October 21. Undoubtedly this is why everything is in perfect shape. We do have one infinitesimally small suggestion. We prefer a classic Caesar salad, not one with "grilled" romaine. We don't think Caesar Cardini would approve. Now we will probably have to return under an assumed name. Call (800) 996-1913 for reservations. Visit www.the-gasparilla-inn.com.
